[2017–2018 SAMPLE FINANCIAL AID SCENARIOS]
Getting my four year degree lit a fire in me—it made me hungry to do and learn more.

For the 20 years Michael Zarrilli worked in the Mount Vernon Police Department he felt like he had unfinished business. A college degree he started right out of high school was incomplete. “Life happened—I was recruited by the police department and stopped classes,” he said. Finally ready to take that next step, in 2004, Zarrilli enrolled in the B.S. in Organizational Management (EDGE) Program and completed his degree. “I wanted a promotion at work and I knew this would give me an edge.” Zarrilli enrolled and immersed himself in his education, “I loved being in the classroom with so many accomplished professionals. I learned from my peers and in the end got the skills needed to advance my career.” Shortly after graduation he was promoted to Sergeant and then to Lieutenant. But, for Zarrilli, it didn’t end there. After completing his B.S. in Organizational Management, he enrolled in Mercy’s MBA Program and graduated with distinction. He said, “Getting my four year degree lit a fire in me—it made me hungry to do and learn more.”

I’m the first in my family to go to college. As a woman majoring in computer science I’m a minority in my classes. I know a lot of girls who enjoy computers and gaming as much as I do, but they lean toward other sciences.

I loved art and science and wasn’t sure which path I wanted to take. But after I joined Mercy’s STEM program and we visited IBM I was sold on computer sciences. I began taking courses in computer architecture and programming.

Now I’m studying full-time and working part-time at GameStop doing what I love.

My dream is to create my own video games. I plan on learning Japanese because one day soon I’ll be working at Nintendo headquarters in Tokyo.

I’ll be the first Mexican-American woman to work at Nintendo.

I’m a Mercy College student. I don’t just have a passion, I have a plan.

We’re a different kind of school because we attract a different kind of student.

It’s a place so thoroughly different that even our mascot is a maverick.
WHY NOT IMMURE YOURSELF IN THE CULTURE AND LIVE IT?

Mercy College’s study abroad programs bring you right into the action and to other lands to study.

SEE THE SIGHTS YOU’VE ALWAYS READ ABOUT.

Sample that new dish you’ve been dying to try and explore famous landmarks all while earning Mercy College credits toward your degree.

MERCY COLLEGE HAS PARTNER INSTITUTIONS IN 16 COUNTRIES all over the world from Antigua to Germany to Wales and many more. While studying abroad, students remain enrolled at Mercy College and even plan out their journey with their PACT mentor and our Center for Global Engagement giving students the best of both worlds.
I didn’t start college until I was 33. After high school I went off on a world tour.

I joined the Army and “visited” Greece, Kosovo, Kuwait, Iraq and Afghanistan.

The things I saw and experienced were an education in themselves. I returned home with a debilitating respiratory condition caused by jet fumes and mold-infested living quarters. Doctors called it a disability. I don’t like that word because I never once questioned my abilities.

I took my Army college tuition benefits and looked for a place that could help me make a difference in the world. I found Mercy. I felt at home here, like I was part of a bigger organization trying to achieve important things. My studies in science awakened a curiosity about my condition. I researched environmental causes of disease. After Mercy I’m going straight to graduate school to become a rehabilitation counselor for veterans with disabilities. In the meantime, I’m helping to develop a center that offers services and support to the over 200 vets who are enrolled at Mercy.

Because that’s what we do at Mercy—we take care of each other and encourage each other to reach higher.

I’m inspired every day by the sight of Mercy students using their abilities for good, pushing and striving to better themselves, their families, their communities and our country. My time at Mercy is almost up but I’ll carry what I learned here with me for the rest of my life.
